What Are the Major Market Drivers?

A primary factor fueling Ajovy market growth is the rising prevalence of migraine cases.

Migraines, often characterized by severe headaches, nausea, and sensitivity to light and sound, are becoming more common due to:

- Increasing stress levels
- Unhealthy lifestyle changes
- Environmental factors
- Genetic predisposition

Ajovy, known for reducing both the frequency and severity of migraine attacks, provides significant relief for chronic and episodic migraine sufferers. For instance, as of March 2024, The House of Commons Library reported that approximately 10 million people in the UK suffer from migraines. Additionally, The Migraine Trust estimates that over one million individuals experience chronic migraines, suffering symptoms at least 15 days per month. This rising prevalence underscores the growing demand for Ajovy treatments.
