What Are the Major Drivers Behind the Curosurf Poractant Alfa Market's Growth?

One of the primary forces behind the expansion of the Curosurf poractant alfa market is the rising incidence of respiratory disorders. Conditions such as asthma, chronic obstructive pulmonary disease (COPD), and lung cancer are becoming increasingly common due to:

- Rising air pollution levels, which exacerbate asthma and other respiratory conditions.
- Aging global populations, leading to a higher prevalence of age-related lung diseases like

COPD.

Another significant driver is the increase in premature births. Infants born before 37 weeks of gestation often experience severe respiratory difficulties. Poractant alfa plays a crucial role in their treatment by:

- Lowering lung surface tension, ensuring lungs remain open.
- Enhancing oxygen exchange, reducing the risk of severe complications.
- Improving survival rates in neonatal intensive care units (NICUs).
