Mihir Shah of the US Review of Books gave her praise for this book, highlighting “The author’s ability to create a simplified storytelling structure with easy, engaging characters to follow, chiefly Little Seed and The Worm, allows younger kids to invest themselves in the characters and attempt to model the actions of these characters in their own lives.”

This book was previously displayed during the 2024 Frankfurt International Book Fair in Frankfurt, Germany, from October 16 to 20, 2024. The said book fair is the world's largest book fair. Attracting over 215,000 attendees and 4,000 exhibitors from over 130 countries each year. It has been the beating heart of the publishing industry for more than 70 years, uniting voices from all over the world.

Kelley was interviewed by Benji Cole of the People of Distinction network. The said network is one of the most extensive and wide-ranging radio shows in the United States. It is the right fit for authors who want to increase their exposure to readers.

childhood summers alternating between the homes of her paternal and maternal grandparents. From a young age, she cherished being an essential part of her family's daily life. Whether tending to her grandparents' garden on their rural Missouri farm or helping prepare meals for family gatherings, she found joy and comfort in the warmth of family.

At 16, Kelley was discovered by a model scout at a local swimming pool, which led her to move to New York City shortly after. Over the next 18 years, she lived a life far beyond what she had ever imagined during her childhood. Her career introduced her to a love of travel, and through these experiences, she gained a broader perspective of the world and her role within it.

Kelley finds her greatest peace and happiness in nature. Whether hiking in the mountains or swimming in the ocean, she feels a deep connection to the vastness of the world. On any given day, you might find her walking through the woods with her husband, Harold, and their two dogs. As a mother of three incredible children, she has become a passionate advocate for empowering young people.

In a world where children are often overwhelmed by messages telling them they're not good enough, Kelley hopes to make a difference by sharing messages of self-acceptance. She aims to inspire children to embrace who they are and feel confident in their own skin.
