This joining of creative culinary minds brought together innovative ideas and honed skills to create a magnificent menu of delicious dishes. It is a true example of the gategroup ideal: creating culinary connections.

This partnership, developed over the past year, resulted in 36 meticulously crafted dishes from MGM's signature restaurants — Imperial Court (Lingnan cuisine) and Aux Beaux Arts (French bistro). This achievement is a testament to servair Macau's expertise in in-flight catering and their ability to execute high-profile collaborations. servair Macau bring their expertise to the table, opening up to the collaborative process, both sharing knowledge and taking in the thoughts and ideas of their partners. The result is an incredible set of dishes that both delight and satisfy.

"It has been a remarkable event and a fantastic collaboration. From a culinary perspective, the teamwork in designing this menu was outstanding. The MGM Grand chefs, in collaboration with the MCS team, crafted a fantastic menu that introduced advanced culinary techniques such as Pâté en Croûte and layered cubical brioche bread to name a few. This significantly enhanced the menu and allowed our MCS team to acquire new skills," said Chef Dave Minten, Regional Executive Chef at gategroup. "Collaborations like this are essential for our industry, where hospitality and aviation chefs can work together on menu design. Both culinary teams shared and learned from each other. The menu inspiration was drawn from classic French and Chinese dishes that beautifully came together for the Air Macau customers to choose from."

A collaboration like this with MGM and Air Macau shows that servair Macau continues to deliver excellence while maintaining high service standards, and continuously innovating to enhance passenger experience, while working together closely with new and lasting business partners.
