I built FactorFox to lead. Now I'm back to finish what I started—only this time, we're building a specialty finance network that connects lenders, operators, and capital providers in real-time,” original founder of FactorFox and a driving force in the specialty finance technology space, has officially reacquired FactorFox and its Latin American counterpart, iProveedor. The deal marks a high-stakes return to the industry he helped shape and signals the launch of a next-generation specialty finance network engineered for speed, scale, and AI-native automation.

“I built FactorFox to lead. Now I'm back to finish what I started—only this time, we're building a specialty finance network that connects lenders, operators, and capital providers in real time,” said Vasquez.

Under prior ownership, the FactorFox platform saw stalled innovation. With the original visionary back in control, the company is being repositioned to take the lead again—this time with deeper infrastructure, more powerful integrations, and a clear roadmap for growth across multiple verticals.

The Rebuild Starts Now

FactorFox now serves as the flagship technology platform within FactorEvo Holdings, a strategic operating company that includes:

- FactorEvo – the first and only AI-native operating system purpose-built for the transportation and specialty finance industry. Designed from the ground up with event-driven architecture, it automates workflows, embeds intelligence into every step of the funding lifecycle, and connects funders, carriers, and capital sources in real time.
- Trucker Copilot – is the mobile command center for FactorFox and FactorEvo—built for the realities of the road and the demands of modern trucking. Drivers and carriers get end-to-end control with AI-powered tools for instant load matching, real-time route optimization, credit checks, and same-day invoice factoring. It eliminates the guesswork, speeds up cash flow, and puts your entire operation in the palm of your hand.

- Factor Copilot – is the next-generation platform for general factoring, ABL, invoice purchasing, and PO funding—powered by AI and built on event-driven architecture. It turns manual tasks into intelligent automations, enabling specialty finance companies to fund faster, operate leaner, and scale without adding headcount.

With these pieces in place, the company is no longer just a software provider—it's the foundation of a new kind of specialty finance network: smarter, faster, vertically integrated, and optimized for scale.

Product Expansion Coming in July

Beginning in July 2025, FactorFox will roll out several new modules built natively with automation, data intelligence, and AI-enhanced workflows:

- Transportation Factoring
- Invoice Receivables Purchasing
- Asset-Based Lending (ABL)
- Purchase Order (PO) Funding
- Reverse Factoring

Each module is designed to eliminate manual processing, reduce friction across the funding lifecycle, and create real-time visibility for factoring companies and their clients.

“Competitors are still pushing clunky workflows and overbuilt dashboards. We’re building the operating system for specialty finance—a platform that runs lean, thinks fast, and gets deals done,” Vasquez added.

Meet the Team at IFA 2025 in California

Robert Vasquez and the FactorFox team will be live at the International Factoring Association (IFA) Conference this May in Palm Desert, California.

Attendees will get an early look at the reimagined FactorFox platform and the broader FactorEvo network that's reshaping how funding flows in today's market.

About FactorFox

Originally launched in 2002, FactorFox was the world's first cloud-native platform built

In 2025, Vasquez reacquired FactorFox to return it to its roots—with a next-generation vision and the infrastructure to lead once again.
