Which factors are accelerating the growth of the Uveal Neoplasms Market?

The surging incidence of eye cancer is projected to impel the growth of the uveal neoplasms market forward. Eye cancer refers to the proliferation of abnormal cells in the eye, which can materialize in various parts of the eye, such as the retina, iris, or optic nerve. The rising incidence of eye cancer may be attributed to aspects such as augmented detection, environmental exposures, and aging populations. Uveal neoplasms, particularly uveal melanoma, are a rare kind of eye cancer that can metastasize to other organs, notably the liver, posing significant health threats. As per Cancer Research UK, a UK-based cancer research organization, eye cancer incidence rates are projected to rise by 50% in the UK between 2023-2025 and 2038-2040, to 3 cases per 100,000 people on average each year by 2038. As a result, the increasing incidence of eye cancer is driving the growth of the uveal neoplasms market.
