A Unique Approach to Consumer Protection

Through I Buy Junk Mail, consumers can contribute to financial transparency by simply sending in their unwanted debt-related mail. Rhode analyzes these offers to identify misleading claims, potential scams, and business practices that can serve as educational opportunities for consumers. The findings are then shared publicly to help others avoid falling victim to offers they may not fully understand.

How It Works

Consumers who receive questionable debt relief solicitations—including offers for Eliminate Your Debt, Auto Loan Modification, Debt Settlement, Credit Counseling, Credit Repair, Debt Validation, Debt Consolidation Loans, Sue Your Mortgage Company, Stop Foreclosure, and Reduce Your Student Loans—can participate in I Buy Junk Mail by submitting their mail and, in return, earning a small payment ($5) for their effort or electing to have a charitable contribution made to help others in need.

The process is simple:

1. Gather unwanted debt-related mail.
2. Clearly photograph or scan the front and back of the documents and the envelope.
3. Submit the materials to GetOutOfDebt.org at <https://getoutofdebt.org/junk>. Personal information is removed.
4. Receive compensation if your submission is published, or choose to have it donated to the designated charitable cause for participating in consumer advocacy.

Shining a Light on Deceptive Practices

With over three decades of experience in consumer advocacy, Rhode has dedicated his career to uncovering fraudulent financial schemes and guiding individuals through debt challenges. I Buy Junk Mail extends this mission by leveraging crowdsourced materials to document marketing strategies, potential regulatory violations, and high-risk financial products. Over the years, Rhode has found that real offers are the most effective way to educate consumers.

“Too many consumers fall prey to misleading promises of debt relief, only to find themselves in worse financial situations,” said Rhode. “By analyzing and educating people about these offers, I empower people with the knowledge they need to protect themselves and make smarter financial choices.”

Join the Effort

Consumers interested in participating can learn more and submit their junk mail at <https://getoutofdebt.org/junk>.

By taking part, individuals not only earn money for their submissions but also contribute to a larger mission of consumer protection and financial education.
