

Business Reporter: Going it alone can increase the likelihood of not seeing digital transformation through

How working with a strategic partner can smooth the way

LONDON, UNITED KINGDOM, April 3, 2025 /EINPresswire.com/ -- In an article published on Business Reporter, Darren Smith, Head of Transformation at Liberata, discusses how strategic partners can contribute to the success of digital transformation projects through their expertise, experience and resources. Even if the prerequisites for a successful digital transformation are all in place, such as a clear vision and well-defined objectives, these projects can often succumb to budget overruns, resource shortages, poor planning, or internal resistance to change. Experts also underscore the importance of establishing clear and agreed-upon responsibilities and a governance structure, as well as continuous performance monitoring to keep the transformation programme on track.

However, guidance from a strategic partner can help remove obstacles and drive innovation and transformation, ultimately leading to a successful project. Organisations can fully leverage a strategic partner's existing technologies, processes and resources. They can also take advantage of the economies of scale, expertise, and capabilities a partner can offer, either directly or through an ecosystem of niche partners. Furthermore, a partner can help with the oversight of IT infrastructure and software development, provide on-demand support and optional end-to-end management through business process outsourcing.

Liberata is a transformation and service delivery specialist offering end-to-end solutions to enable customers to run services quickly and avoid spending significant resources of their own.
