Chemsex, a growing concern in the LGBTQ+ community and beyond, refers to the intentional use of methamphetamine or other psychoactive drugs to enhance or facilitate sexual experiences. Often called PnP (Party and Play) by chemsex addicts, this addictive behavior can lead to a range of severe physical, emotional, and psychological consequences, including:

- Increased risk of HIV, hepatitis, and other blood-borne diseases
- Exacerbated mental health issues, such as depression, anxiety, and psychosis
- Damage to relationships, careers, and overall well-being
- Increased risk of overdose and death

"Methamphetamine use, particularly in the context of chemsex, poses significant challenges to individuals and communities," said Jim Bryan, Program Director at Beachcomber Intensive Outpatient. "Our specialized Chemsex Addiction Program in Fort Lauderdale is designed to provide a safe, supportive, and non-judgmental environment for individuals in the PnP (Party and Play) life to address the underlying issues driving their addiction and develop the skills necessary for long-term recovery."

The Beachcomber Chemsex addiction program in Fort Lauderdale will offer:

Comprehensive assessments and individualized treatment planning

Evidence-based therapies, including cognitive-behavioral therapy (CBT) and trauma-informed care

Group support and education on topics such as healthy relationships, coping skills, and relapse prevention

Medication-assisted treatment (MAT) options, as needed

Ongoing support and aftercare planning to ensure a smooth transition to long-term recovery

As one of the few treatment centers in the Southeastern United States to offer a specialized Meth and Sex addiction program, Fort Lauderdale, Beachcomber IOP is committed to addressing this critical need.
