Experts at IBN Technologies emphasize that the beginning of the financial year is the ideal moment for startups and SMEs in Washington to get their finances in order. By starting early in 2025, local businesses can maintain better control over their accounts and simplify the upcoming tax season.

"Most companies end up reacting after the tax deadline has passed. But smart business owners use this time to pause and make a strategic move—outsourcing their bookkeeping before the next financial cycle begins," says Ajay Mehta, CEO of IBN Technologies.

As the new financial year progresses and critical IRS and compliance deadlines approach, Washington-based businesses that act now can streamline their financial operations, minimize risk, and refocus their internal resources on driving growth.

Bookkeeping Woes Are a Growing Concern for Startups

For many startups with lean teams, especially in Washington's competitive tech, retail, and service sectors, financial management becomes overwhelming. Common challenges include:

- 1) Missed deadlines for IRS filings
- 2) Irregular or constrained cash flow
- 3) Errors in payroll processing and compliance
- 4) Inaccurate or incomplete financial reporting
- 5) Inadequate tools for forecasting and financial planning
- 6) Elevated costs and administrative strain from in-house bookkeeping
