

Edward DuCoin Joins ABA Criminal Justice Section to Support Justice Reform

LAUREL SPRINGS, NJ, UNITED STATES, April 15, 2025 /EINPresswire.com/ -- Edward DuCoin, entrepreneur and author of the forthcoming book Indicted Loyalty, Convicted Logic, has joined the American Bar Association's (ABA) Criminal Justice Section. This is a significant step in his ongoing commitment to supporting legal system reform through collaboration, research, and advocacy.

The ABA's Criminal Justice Section comprises prosecutors, defense attorneys, judges, academics, and other professionals working to improve the fairness and effectiveness of the U.S. legal system. DuCoin, though not a licensed attorney, joins the Section as a business leader and concerned citizen who has experienced firsthand the complexities of the justice system.

"I joined the ABA to stay informed with the most current developments in criminal justice reform and to build relationships with those working to improve the system," said DuCoin. "Engaging with professionals who understand what's broken—and are committed to fixing it—is essential for anyone hoping to contribute to meaningful change."

DuCoin's current advocacy is informed in part by his upcoming memoir, Indicted Loyalty, Convicted Logic. The book examines the legal challenges he has faced and explores broader systemic concerns, including mandatory minimum sentencing and resource constraints in public defense. Through research and storytelling, it aims to offer a lens into how legal structures can be reimaged to serve justice more effectively.

Edward DuCoin

With a career spanning over four decades, DuCoin has built and scaled multiple businesses, raised over $20 million in capital, and supported entrepreneurial ventures across nine countries. His current work focuses on digital transformation, ethical leadership, and access to justice.

As part of his efforts, DuCoin has begun participating in national conversations on criminal justice reform and plans to share insights from his ABA membership through public writing, including commentary on Medium. He is also engaging with legal community members to explore potential areas for policy improvement and public education.

“This is not just about my experience,” DuCoin added. “It’s about working with others to help build a system that better serves everyone—regardless of background or resources.”

The book Indicted Loyalty, Convicted Logic, is expected to be released in late 2025.
