

New Legislation and Rising Security Threats Prompt WorldSafe to Urge Action from Regulated Industries

The risk environment has shifted. Security is no longer optional, and compliance is just the baseline.

RICHMOND, VA, UNITED STATES, April 21, 2025 /EINPresswire.com/ -- With workplace violence and regulatory scrutiny on the rise, WorldSafe is urging facility directors and compliance executives across regulated sectors to strengthen their security and emergency preparedness programs.

Recent laws—including California’s SB 553, which mandates workplace violence prevention programs—have sparked a wave of legislative momentum nationwide. Similar proposals in Washington, New York, and Oregon aim to enforce comprehensive threat assessments, staff training, and workplace safety protocols.

According to the U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics, workplace homicides increased by nearly 9% in 2023, and violent incidents across regulated sectors—including healthcare, logistics, education, and manufacturing—have surged by 25% in five years.

“

The risk environment has shifted. Security is no longer optional, and compliance is just the baseline.”

Joe Heinzen, CEO

“The risk environment has shifted. Security is no longer optional, and compliance is just the baseline,” said Joe Heinzen, CEO and Founder of WorldSafe. “Executives need resilience programs that are strategic, scalable, and defensible—not just reactive.”

WorldSafe Launches Resilience-as-a-Service Program
