Alicia Lyttle

education and consulting firm founded by Alicia Lyttle, delivered a high-impact virtual training at the Alabama Minority Vendor Program (MVP Alabama) on April 10, 2025. The session, focused on integrating artificial intelligence into the architecture, engineering, and construction (AEC) sectors, attracted minority-owned businesses seeking practical strategies to modernize their bidding and proposal processes.

Alicia Lyttle, AI strategist and CEO of AI InnoVision, opened the session with a clear and accessible overview of generative AI. She then guided participants through how to use AI in the bid/no-bid decision process, showcasing tools and techniques that improve speed, accuracy, and competitiveness.

Each attendee received an exclusive AI Success Kit featuring:

- Pre-built AI prompts tailored for RFP analysis
- A curated list of AI tools for bid/no-bid workflows

“This session proved that AI is not just for tech companies—it's a game-changer for vendors bidding on public and private contracts,” said Alicia Lyttle.

The workshop drew strong engagement and positive feedback from attendees who praised the session for its clarity, real-world relevance, and immediate applicability. Many were left inspired to integrate AI into their operations and procurement strategies.

The Alabama Minority Vendor Program continues to support minority-owned businesses with innovative resources, and this session marked a pivotal step toward future-proofing the AEC industry through artificial intelligence.
