A Case That Left A Lasting Impression

In the early days of his career, he had a meeting with a client looking for advice on DUI charges, at a coffee shop in Square One Mall. The man had brought some documents with him. And when he reached his pocket to pull them out, Jonathan noticed the police badge on his shirt and asked if he was a police officer. The man nodded, saying that the case had significant implications for his personal and professional life and expressed how crucial it was for him to win the case.

Jonathan understood that the case was not just a legal issue, but the officer's career, reputation and future that were on the line.

Jonathan was even more intrigued and he asked how he got his phone number. He received an unexpected response from the officer, as he said, "I asked the boys at my police detachment who they lost to in court — and they all said Jonathan Lapid."

Jonathan shared, "I found it ironic that even police officers can make mistakes and need help sometimes. I was pleased to help him and am happy to advise that my office was able to save his job."

Jonathan's strong advocacy successfully defended the officer, ultimately helping him keep his job and standing within the force. This incident stands as a testimonial of the trust placed in him by clients from all walks of life.
