The event highlighted the intersection of architectural innovation, structural integrity, and timeless design. Attendees explored the principles behind passive house design, advanced engineering, and the integration of modern smart home technology. The home features premium finishes throughout—from handcrafted cabinetry and exquisite stone countertops to energy-efficient windows, smart water monitoring systems, and high-performance insulation.

Participants gained practical insights into the thoughtful material selection process and how each design element enhances durability, energy efficiency, and long-term value. The walkthrough emphasized the value of collaboration between builder and architect in delivering customized homes tailored to each client's lifestyle and vision.

The tour qualified for 1 LU/HSW continuing education credit through AIA Potomac Valley (Course #PV041725), with a focus on custom home design, sustainability, high-performance materials, and energy-efficient technology.

Light refreshments were served as attendees engaged in meaningful discussions and networking throughout the event. Photos from the event capture professionals walking through the site, examining design details, and collaborating on best practices in luxury homebuilding.
