Blending the provocative with the opulent, the "Empire of Excess" collection continues Stout's signature aesthetic — metallic textures, surreal sensuality, and striking pop-surrealist compositions that have captured the attention of elite collectors worldwide. Each piece is designed to command attention, elevate interiors, and appreciate in value — making this series a serious investment opportunity for discerning buyers.

This series is pure decadence. It's about desire, status, and the spectacle of modern luxury.”

“This series is pure decadence. It's about desire, status, and the spectacle of modern luxury,” says Stout. “It's meant for bold collectors who want more than art — they want impact.”

The collection includes limited-edition large-format metallic prints, immersive installations, and sculptural works, all curated to reflect the seductive chaos of consumer culture and industrial beauty. Collectors from Los Angeles, London, Paris, and Dubai have already joined the waitlist, with several high-profile names among them.

Following the artist's recent string of sold-out exhibitions, this launch further cements Stout as a dominant force in contemporary art and a rising star among blue-chip collectors. Critics and curators are already calling Empire of Excess his most ambitious and market-shifting work to date.

“Marko Stout is redefining what contemporary pop art can be. His work is seductive, rebellious, and commercially explosive,” said an NYC-based art advisor who previewed the new pieces.

With Pre-Sales Closed, access to Empire of Excess is now limited to those who have secured a spot on the official waitlist, which is nearing capacity. The public release is set for late Spring 2025, with a VIP preview and red-carpet exhibition scheduled in Manhattan.
