ParentShield now protects the elderly

"Removing a mobile phone isn't a solution for older people who rely on their devices to stay in touch with family and friends" said Graham Tyers, CEO of ParentShield. "Families are looking for ways to maintain that essential contact while adding an extra layer of security."

ParentShield includes several features that are being used to support elderly mobile users:

Closed User Group: In Ultra-Secure Mode, phones can be set to allow communication only with trusted contacts.

New Correspondent Alerts: Families receive notifications when the phone is contacted by an unknown number.

Time Controls: Communication windows can be set to manage when calls and texts are permitted.

Families are looking for ways to maintain that essential contact while adding an extra layer of security."

ParentShield SIM cards work in any unlocked mobile phone, providing an option for families seeking to manage mobile phone use while maintaining independence.

The increased interest from families supporting elderly users highlights the broader applicability of mobile safety measures initially designed for children.
