A Convergence of Fashion and Advocates, the event featured a runway show spotlighting sustainable fashion aligned with various SDGs, including climate action, gender equality, and reduced inequalities. Celebrity designer César Galindo headlined the show, presenting eco-conscious designs that blend vibrant artistry with his Mexican heritage. Other notable designers included John Ashford, Vernice Holmes, Nataliia Skulska, and Lika Rossi, each showcasing collections that emphasized sustainability and cultural diversity.

As the evening continued, the Peace Awards Ceremony was presented by Creative Wall Street's CEO, Jeremy Lin, honoring individuals and organizations making significant contributions to peace, cultural exchange, and community empowerment. The ceremony underscored the commitment to supporting initiatives aligned with the UN's peace and sustainability goals. During the program, speakers at the event included Dr. Jessica Konopka, Catherine Schuller-Gruenwald, Monika Emad, and Samira Abbassi, who delivered compelling messages on harnessing innovation to advance the SDGs. Their speeches highlighted the importance of creativity, education, and technology in fostering a sustainable and equitable world.

The "United Nations of Fashion" event served as a platform to unite diverse voices and foster inclusion through arts and fashion, supporting a sustainable, equitable, and peaceful world. The United Nations Commutech Group and Creative Wall Street plan to continue this initiative, reinforcing New York City's role as a hub for cultural exchange and environmental stewardship.

"It is an honor to build bridges through arts and fashion in the vibrant, diverse city of New York." The United Nations Commutech Group and Creative Wall Street's Earth Day Celebration not only honored Mother Earth but also forged a lasting movement where innovation, sustainability, and global peace converge to shape a better world" says Dr. Konopka .
