Since its founding in 1992, PAFF has become a vital platform for showcasing the stories, voices, and creative visions of filmmakers from Africa and the African diaspora. The festival has hosted more than 5,000 films from over 60 countries and has welcomed more than a million attendees across its three-decade legacy.

“

PAFF continues to be the place where Black stories are told with power, purpose, and pride. 2026 will build on this legacy by spotlighting the next wave of creative talent from across the diaspora.”

*Oduduwa Olatunji, PAFF
Executive Director*

PAFF is calling for feature-length and short narrative and documentary films, animated works, web series, and experimental projects that explore the Pan African experience. Submissions are open to filmmakers of any race or ethnicity and films from any background that highlight global Black stories.

“PAFF continues to be the place where Black stories are told with power, purpose, and pride,” said Oduduwa

Olatunji, PAFF Executive Director. “Our 2026 festival will build on this legacy by spotlighting the next wave of creative talent from across the diaspora. We’re excited to welcome filmmakers to share their work and be part of something bigger.”
