This is more than an art display—it's a conversation we're proud to lead at Watermark Laguna Niguel, celebrating every individual's story and challenging the stereotypes that too often define aging.”

is committed to creating extraordinary environments where individuals thrive through wellness, enrichment, and purpose. “It's an honor to bring the Feeling Our Age exhibition to Watermark Laguna Niguel,” said Kathleen Cosgrove. “These portraits and stories have transformed how people think about aging, including myself. I hope visitors leave inspired by the strength and beauty that come with every year lived.”

Among the women featured are former legislators, nurses, artists, and pilots, alongside essays in which each woman shares her journey addressing the challenges of growing older while expressing hope for the future. Their images, stories, and the accompanying coffee table book aim to redefine aging and fight age discrimination, which disproportionately affects women.

With the World Health Organization projecting one in six people will be over 60 by 2030, and studies showing more than half of women over 65 experience ageism in the workplace, the exhibition arrives at a crucial moment—turning awareness into action through the language of art.

“At Watermark, we see aging as renewal, purpose, and connection,” said Sundeep Jeste, Executive Director of Watermark Laguna Niguel. “This exhibition reflects our mission to honor every story and challenge aging stereotypes. It’s a conversation we’re proud to lead.”

Watermark Laguna Niguel is a community of modern senior living with the warmth of a close-knit community. In a city known for its love of the arts—where sculptures, murals, and creative expressions line the streets—the community embraces Laguna Niguel’s legacy as a cultural destination.
