As global mobility rebounds and immigration policies continue to evolve post-election, the firm's new analysis highlights critical changes to H-1B visa policy, green card processing delays, and compliance risks tied to remote work arrangements.

"2025 is a defining year for U.S. immigration," said the Press Secretary at Global Immigration Partners PLLC. "Our clients—both employers and individuals—need strategic insight, not just legal services. That's why we've published this forward-looking guide."

Key Takeaways from the Report:

2025 Immigration Trends

H-1B Program: Anticipated changes to the lottery system and increased scrutiny of third-party placements.

Green Card Backlogs: Continued delays in EB-2/EB-3 categories, especially for Indian and Chinese nationals.

Remote Work Risks: Employers must update LCAs and maintain compliance in hybrid environments.

Visa Interview Delays: Persistent processing issues at high-volume consulates like Mumbai and Mexico City.

Policy Outlook: Legislative uncertainty and the potential impact of new executive actions post-election.

The report also provides actionable recommendations for employers, including early H-1B planning for FY2026, PERM audit preparation, and best practices for I-9 and public access file compliance.
