Venous thromboembolism (VTE), which includes deep vein thrombosis (DVT) and pulmonary embolism (PE), remains a significant public health concern in the United States. According to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC), up to 900,000 people in the U.S. are affected by VTE each year, and as many as 100,000 die as a result. Despite these alarming numbers, VTE remains underdiagnosed and undertreated—highlighting the importance of comprehensive, multidisciplinary approaches to care.

“

I am immensely proud of the work we have done in VTE treatment and intervention, and very grateful for the recognition that this COE represents.”
