Licensing our proven Entrex Capital Market platform — demonstrated through real revenues and profits — is a logical next step to scale to build and support long-term shareholder value”

“With shifting cultural and policy sentiment away from ESG and environmental securities, we saw an opportunity to broaden the application of our proven platform to support institutional fixed-income investors,” said Stephen H. Watkins, CEO of Entrex. “Our financial statements now reflect early licensing agreements and structured relationships across each emerging marketplace—illustrating the revenue potential and scalability of our model.”

Thomas Harblin, Partner at Entrex, added, “By maintaining 51% non-dilutive ownership in each licensed market and offering an 11.6x EBITDA buyout option, we enable sector operators to grow their platforms under a known exit framework. This structure minimizes capital expenditure and operational risk for Entrex while creating compelling value opportunities for NTRX shareholders.”

Watkins continued, “Licensing our proven Entrex Capital Market platform—demonstrated through real revenues and profits—is a logical next step. We anticipate generating scalable issuer licensing fees and recurring transaction revenues, both of which will support long-term shareholder value.”

“With 33 million private companies in the United States compared to only 18,000 publicly traded ones, the market opportunity is massive. Our goal is to provide a capital access and investment infrastructure that serves this underserved majority with proven, regulatory-compliant, and revenue-based technology.”
