Spanning 65 original interviews, including 28 with individuals who have had near-death experiences (NDEs), this series weaves together stories of survival, grief, revelation, and spiritual awakening. It brings together voices rarely heard in one place: grief counselors, psychologists, metaphysical teachers, mediums, and survivors of clinical death—all sharing their deeply human experiences and insights.

The series begins by meeting listeners where they are: in the raw immediacy of grief. The opening episodes feature deeply personal accounts from people who have lost children, spouses, siblings, and close friends. These early stories are not sensational—they're sacred. They're grounded in real-world heartbreak, but also resilience, offering comfort to anyone navigating the silent terrain of mourning.

Outer Limits of Inner Truth

"This series was created for people in mourning and for those who are curious about life beyond this world," said Ryan McCormick, host of the Outer Limits of Inner Truth podcast. "The program is not driven by ideology or dogma. It's about opening a door and letting others walk through it in their own way. I truly hope this presentation can bring people some measure of peace."

As the series unfolds, it shifts tone—becoming lighter, more hopeful, and spiritually expansive. What begins as a study of loss becomes a wide-ranging exploration of consciousness, purpose, and the enduring nature of love. Rather than delivering easy answers, The Journey Beyond Death invites listeners to sit with life's hardest questions. It approaches mortality not with fear or finality, but with reverence, awe, and curiosity.

Key episodes in the series include:

"Living in a World That Expects You to Be 'Over It'" – Survivors and experts talk about the pressure to "move on" and what real emotional recovery looks like.

"How You Can Help Others in Mourning" – Practical and compassionate tools for being there when someone else is grieving.
