Designed in 1950 and completed in 1952 for Dow's brother-in-law, Robert Bennett, this nearly 5,000 square foot home is a stunning example of Alden B. Dow's architectural legacy. While the exterior remains true to Dow's clean, balanced design aesthetic with tan brick, stucco, and low-pitched rooflines, the interior is anything but understated. Known as the "Gallery House," the home features a sunken living room bordered by a raised brick-paved gallery, a two-sided brick fireplace, floor-to-ceiling windows overlooking the Midland Country Club golf course, and an intricately lit dining room with a wooden box light ceiling featuring red glass inlays.
