It's a good feeling when we can supply these mattresses to families who need cooling comfort when summer temperatures are above 100 degrees in San Antonio – that helps me sleep better at night too!”

In Texas, where summer temperatures frequently exceed 100°F, demand for cooling gel mattresses surges dramatically. San Antonio residents, in particular, seek these innovative mattresses to stay comfortable during sweltering nights. The intense heat drives a spike in consumer interest, as families prioritize sleep solutions that combat the oppressive summer climate.

Among the many types of mattresses produced, cooling gel mattresses are designed to provide a comfortable, temperature-regulated sleep experience. Infused with gel beads or layers, these mattresses absorb and dissipate body heat, preventing the overheating that often disrupts sleep in hot climates. The gel works by drawing heat away from the body and maintaining a cooler surface, making them an ideal choice for warm weather.

Acquiring factory closeout mattresses, in general, is no small feat. Mattress factories often have strict protocols, limited surplus inventory, and complex negotiation processes. Mike Bonanno, who owns and operates Miracle Mattress, explained, "It took quite a bit of work to negotiate with the factories on this lot of cooling gel mattresses, but the work paid off when we were able to bring them in at the perfect time, right when hot weather started."

This acquisition allows Miracle Mattress to meet the heightened demand with unbeatable prices. Bonanno added, "It's a good feeling when we can supply these mattresses to families who need cooling comfort when summer temperatures are above 100 degrees in San Antonio – that helps me sleep better at night too!"
