

A Debut Canadian Author Releases a Short Story Collection Concerning Chinese Propaganda

NEW YORK, NY, UNITED STATES, July 29, 2025

/EINPresswire.com/ -- "Hoarded in the depth of memories of the past decades, this has been a work long overdue." - Jiu Da, Historical Fiction author

Written as a fictional short story collection based on first-hand and second-hand propaganda written by both Chinese and foreign writers for China in the first part of 20th century, this collection, through different times and lands, gives insights into how human nature and characteristics are manipulated and can bring about cultural and social corrosion over the centuries.

Extracts:

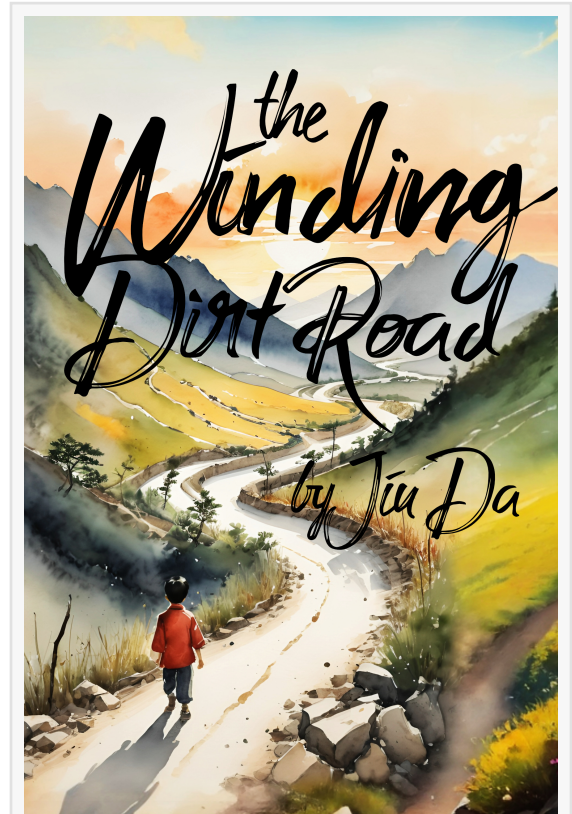

A man recounted that "despite seven decades, Chinese political orientation, even though after certain transformations, remains invariant." (Unforgiven);

A woman overheard every word " ... to the effect that the crime that aids and abets the enemy is greater than the crime that delivers." (Barrel Of A Gun);

The boy was constantly exposed to "the atmosphere abounded with tension and antagonism, with either party constantly looking for startling antitheses amid an otherwise tranquil life." (The Winding Dirt Road);

A man warned that "Because strict directives were being implanted in your mind, the moment you came to this life, you entered a lease contract on terms you could not dictate; you were part of a socialist mechanism without consent, without free will." (The Mother of All Antidotes)
