He added: “We are especially grateful to Eric Kelly, the visionary behind Bridge 2 Technologies, whose bold leadership has created a transformative space where collaboration drives innovation and equity.”

“This collaboration with Bridge 2 Technologies affirms what we’ve always known—that when legal minds unite with innovators, visionaries, and global leaders, real change becomes possible,” said Ashley Upkins, President-Elect of the National Bar Association. “As we prepare to lead the NBA into its next century, we recognize that being present, engaged, and at the table is essential to building a more inclusive, technologically advanced, and globally connected future.”

“Bridge 2 Technologies is more than an event—it’s a catalyst for global transformation,” said James Carter, Vice President of the National Bar Association. “It’s not enough to talk about change; we must be in the rooms where change is being shaped. The NBA is proud to stand shoulder to shoulder with global innovators and visionaries to forge cross-sector alliances that uplift underserved communities and drive equitable progress across industries and borders.”
