Definition:

Chemical recycling of plastics is a process where plastic waste is chemically broken down into its original monomers or other useful chemical components, which can then be used to produce new plastics or other materials. Unlike mechanical recycling, which involves physically melting down plastics, chemical recycling can handle mixed or contaminated plastics that cannot be processed otherwise. This method helps reduce plastic waste, recover valuable materials, and lower environmental impact. There are several techniques, including pyrolysis, depolymerization, and gasification.

Market Drivers:

- Adoption of circular economy, Development of advanced recycling technologies

Market Trends:

- Reduction of plastic waste, Increasing regulatory pressures

Challenges:

- High operational costs, Energy intensity, Lack of global infrastructure
