A Preseason Must-Have: Why This Tune-Up Matters
When air conditioners sit idle through the winter, dirt, debris, and wear-and-tear can slowly compromise their performance. Many systems kick on during the first heat wave only to fumble—either working inefficiently or failing altogether. That's where a preseason tune-up becomes essential.

Stone Heating and Air's $79 AC Tune-Up includes:
Condenser coil cleaning to improve efficiency

□□ Lubrication of all moving parts to reduce wear

□□ Refrigerant level checks to support consistent cooling

□□Electrical component testing to catch early issues

□□Air filter replacement or cleaning to improve air quality

Full system performance check to ensure smooth operation

The goal? To keep your AC unit running as efficiently and dependably as possible, while preventing the kind of mid-July failures that result in emergency repairs or full replacements.

“We understand the importance of a well-functioning air conditioning system, especially during Colorado’s intense summer heat,” said John Stone, owner of Stone Heating and Air. “Our $79 tune-up is designed to give homeowners peace of mind, knowing their system is ready to handle the season efficiently and effectively.”

A Smart Move for Longmont Homeowners

Unlike some service specials that focus on quick checklists or upselling, Stone Heating and Air’s tune-ups are known for being thorough, practical, and personalized. Their certified technicians take time to assess each system, provide honest feedback, and walk customers through any concerns they uncover, without pressure.

For many homeowners, this level of care is a breath of fresh air. The company has built a reputation throughout Longmont and neighboring towns not only for skilled air conditioner repair in Longmont, but for genuine, down-to-earth service that keeps customers coming back.

It’s that approach that has made Stone Heating and Air a trusted partner for everything from emergency service calls to full HVAC installations. They’re not just preparing homes for summer, they’re building long-term relationships with the people inside them.

Don’t Wait for the Heat. Here’s Why Now is the Time

Each year, HVAC companies in Colorado experience a surge in appointments the moment summer kicks in. Stone Heating and Air is encouraging residents to act early, ideally in April or May, before the phones start ringing off the hook.

The $79 tune-up is available for a limited time, but there is no published expiration. Instead, homeowners are urged to book early to secure their preferred appointment window before schedules fill.

By taking advantage of the offer now, customers get:

□□Faster scheduling and shorter wait times

□□Greater peace of mind before temperatures rise

- The opportunity to catch and fix small issues early

- Extended equipment life and improved energy efficiency

- Cleaner indoor air and better overall performance

It's a win-win for homeowners, and one that becomes even more valuable when compared to the cost of emergency repairs or full system replacements down the road.

Pairing the Tune-Up with a Long-Term AC Strategy

While the $79 special is a seasonal promotion, it fits into a much bigger strategy for long-term comfort and savings. Stone Heating and Air also offers regular air conditioning services in Longmont, full system installations, energy audits, and custom HVAC design for new homes or remodels.

Their team can walk homeowners through smart thermostat options, indoor air quality upgrades, and zone-based cooling solutions, all tailored to the size, layout, and usage of the home. They also help customers take advantage of rebates and tax credits where available, making big upgrades more affordable.

In short, Stone Heating and Air offers more than a tune-up. They offer a full-service approach to air conditioning in Longmont that's built on experience, education, and trust.

Real Results, Real People

Homeowners who have used the tune-up service rave about the clarity, professionalism, and comfort they receive.

"I was dreading summer because I knew our system was aging," one Longmont resident shared. "But the technician gave me practical steps to keep it going and didn't try to push a new system. We're cool, comfortable, and feeling good about it."

Another said, "I've worked with other companies where I felt like I was being sold to. Stone was different. They were friendly, transparent, and incredibly thorough."
