This collaboration brings together two leading organizations in eye health with a shared mission: To enhance professional development, support continuing medical education (CME), and improve patient outcomes across the field of ophthalmology and its subspecialties.

"Together, we recognize the value and importance of collaborative educational initiatives to expand and enhance the practice of eye care management in clinical medicine," said Will Riley, Managing Partner, and Scott Scire, Vice President of Collaborative Partnerships at Paradigm. "By working jointly, the Academy and Paradigm design and implement strategic, impactful curricula, leveraging our combined strengths in clinical content and instructional design to deliver meaningful education for Academy members."

"The Academy's commitment to educational excellence aligns perfectly with Paradigm's mission to deliver high-impact, evidence-based learning experiences. Together, we look forward to creating new educational opportunities for eye care professionals and making a measurable difference in patient care,” they stated.

Since its inception in 2023, the partnership has designed and delivered curriculum-based, CME-certified learning initiatives in diabetic macular edema, glaucoma, and neovascular age-related macular degeneration. These initiatives are designed to enrich learning at every level of practice, from early-career professionals to experienced specialists. In addition, the partnership is expanding into other areas of eye care, including dry eye disease, cataract surgery, intraocular lens and retinal vein occlusion.

Paradigm and the Academy are continuing to design and implement grant-supported, independent professional education, based on need, with measurable impact on healthcare, with more announcements forthcoming.
