Hosted by celebrated Hawai'i-based chef and culinary educator Chef Renee, the series highlights the beauty, flavor, and cultural richness of Hawaii. Each bite-sized episode showcases a vibrant and beloved recipe that turns the humble macadamia nut into a culinary centerpiece, from sweet treats to savory sensations.

I'm excited to share new and beloved ways for families to connect with our food and with each other through the joy of cooking”

Chef Renee

Ahualoa Family Farms isn't just a place - it's a community. Rooted in the fertile slopes of Mauna Kea on Hawai'i's Big Island, the farm grows a portion of its own macadamia nuts and sources the rest from over 75 local growers across the island - independent family farms, both big and small. Everything is grown, processed, roasted in small batches and packed fresh on the Big Island, delivering the purest taste of Hawai'i in every bite.

“Macadamia nuts are more than just a snack - they're a tasty treat of culture and cuisine,” said Chef Renee. “I'm excited to share new and beloved ways for families to connect with our food and with each other through the joy of cooking.”

The Mac Nut Mini Series not only brings delicious recipes to life but also shares the story of Hawai'i's agricultural heritage. Viewers will learn how macadamia nuts can elevate everyday dishes and how supporting local farms like Ahualoa means supporting the future of Hawai'i's food systems.
