/EINPresswire.com/ -- A new boutique condominium development has officially launched in Cambridge, Massachusetts, offering a rare opportunity to purchase new construction in one of the most sought-after academic and innovation hubs in the U.S. Located between MIT and Harvard University, the 26-unit project is already seeing strong demand, with only 13 units remaining.

The project features a mix of 1, 2, and 3-bedroom units priced from US$700,000 to US$1.5 million. With projected gross rental yields of 5-6%, the development appeals to investors looking for stable returns in a mature U.S. market.

Boston is the most popular higher education city in the world, and now owning and financing property can be made available”

Donald Klip, Founder of America Mortgages.

America Mortgages, the leading U.S. mortgage lender for foreign nationals and U.S. expats, is facilitating financing for international buyers up to 75% for foreign buyers and up to 80% for overseas expats.

“We are excited to offer this project along with financing to our international clients. Boston is the most popular higher education city in the world, and now owning and financing property can be made available,” Donald Klip, Founder of America Mortgages.

New developments in Cambridge are limited due to zoning restrictions and land scarcity. This launch represents one of the few opportunities for buyers to own newly built property in a market largely comprised of older housing stock.
