“

When our nation faces crisis, it is not enough to stand on the sidelines—veterans and advocates must be present, informed and engaged.”

VETCOMM US CEO Kate Monroe

Monroe, an award-winning advocate for veterans, is renowned for her commitment to supporting America’s heroes—helping them secure VA disability benefits and raising awareness of issues that affect veteran services. She has repeatedly demonstrated her readiness to step into challenging situations to inform, support, and advocate for her community, most notably exemplified by her efforts to personally secure the U.S.-Mexican border alongside the Border Vets.

Now, Monroe is heading to Los Angeles to witness and report firsthand on the arrival of more than 700 active-duty Marines and the mobilization of thousands of National Guard troops, as ordered by the federal government in response to rising tensions surrounding ICE raids and civil unrest. As a Marine Corps veteran, Monroe is uniquely positioned to provide perspective on the role of military personnel in domestic crises and the implications for both service members and civilians.

She will document the Marines' integration with local law enforcement and National Guard units, focusing on how their presence impacts rioters, peaceful demonstrators and the broader community. She will offer insights into the experiences of veterans and active-duty service members who find themselves at the intersection of civil unrest and federal policy, shedding light on the challenges and responsibilities faced by those in uniform.
