Nicholas has created a world that feels like Real Housewives meets What We Do in the Shadows—funny, fierce, and deeply fresh. We believe audiences are hungry for something bold and entirely original.”

Remi Williams

thrilled to announce the acquisition of Housewives of Haunted Houses, an original comedic horror script written by up-and-coming screenwriter Nicholas Martorelli. With its razor-sharp wit, genre-bending tone, and a cast of delightfully monstrous matriarchs, the screenplay represents the latest creative leap forward in the intersection of satire, genre storytelling, and modern-day social commentary.

Martorelli, a St. Louis native and graduate of the University of Maryland, Baltimore County (UMBC), channels his lifelong love of horror and comedy into a uniquely original voice. With Housewives of Haunted Houses, he delivers a whip-smart tale about supernatural suburbanites navigating friendship, betrayal, and community gossip—while also hiding a few deadly secrets and sipping their signature youth-restoring drink, FOY.

Martorelli's journey as a writer is one rooted in resilience and passion. While caring for his mother, storytelling became both an outlet and a calling. That emotional grounding—combined with a cinematic love for genre storytelling—infuses Housewives of Haunted Houses with unexpected heart beneath the claws, fangs, and bandages.

The screenplay follows a coven of supernatural women—vampire, werewolf, mummy, and Frankenstein's bride equivalents—whose glamorous domestic lives unravel after a tabloid exposé threatens to reveal the secret ingredient in their anti-aging elixir. What follows is part mystery, part social satire, and all monster mayhem.

With development now underway, Call Sheet Media is positioning Housewives of Haunted Houses as a feature-length horror-comedy designed to resonate with both fans of cult genre films and mainstream audiences. The company is currently engaging with directors and casting talent aligned with the project's bold tone.
