

Christian Editing & Design supports scholars with personalized academic editing

Christian Editing & Design provides personalized academic editing to support Christian scholars in producing clear, compelling, and publication-ready work.

CINCINNATI, OH, UNITED STATES, June 17, 2025 /EINPresswire.com/ -- As academic institutions reflect on a year marked by AI disruption and shifting standards in scholarly publishing, Christian Editing & Design (CED) is offering something refreshingly simple: real editors providing thoughtful, personalized support to Christian scholars and theologians.

Our editors are knowledgeable believers who take the time to understand your voice, your goals, and your message—because your words matter.”

Rachel Porter

CED’s academic editing services are designed for graduate students, faculty, and writers who want more than algorithmic corrections. The company offers clarity, consistency, and biblical awareness from editors who understand the heart behind the work.

“We prioritize human connection in every project,” said Rachel Porter, co-owner of CED. “Our editors are knowledgeable believers who take the time to understand your voice, your goals, and your message—because your words matter.”

While AI tools continue to expand across academia, many scholars are asking what’s lost when automation replaces human insight. CED’s editors strengthen a scholar’s work without compromising their voice or message.

CED’s academic editing services include the following:

- Line editing for clarity, structure, and tone
- Suggestions informed by biblical understanding
- Style guide alignment (SBL, Turabian, APA, and others)

- Feedback that enhances—not rewrites—your work

CED works with a wide range of academic writing, including dissertations, theses, journal articles, book manuscripts and proposals. Every project is edited by a real person, with careful attention to theological nuance and author intent.

As the academic year winds down, summer offers a valuable opportunity to revisit unfinished drafts, finalize submissions or prepare for fall goals.
