number of surgical procedures, a heightened focus on palliative care, and a marked surge in the incidence of musculoskeletal disorders.

How Fast Will The Prescription Pain Medication Market Grow In The Coming Years?

Looking further ahead, the prescription pain medication market size is poised for an even stronger growth trajectory in the coming years. It is set to balloon to $97.23 billion in 2029, maintaining a 5.7% CAGR throughout the forecast period. Driving this steep growth is a combination of factors such as an amplified demand for personalized medicine, renewed focus on post-traumatic pain management, increasing adoption of telemedicine for pain management, growing patient inclination towards opioid alternatives, and a heightened prevalence of neuropathic pain. Couple this with major industry trends, such as the development of non-opioid pain alternatives and digital health integration as well as disruptive innovation in targeted pain therapies, combination pain medications and non-addictive pain medications, and the future looks promising for the prescription pain medication market.

What Is Driving The Prescription Pain Medication Market Growth?

One major and ubiquitous growth driver identified is the increasing prevalence of arthritis, which is expected to significantly fuel the growth of the prescription pain medication market.

Characterized by inflammation of one or more joints that causes pain, swelling, stiffness, and reduced range of motion, arthritis is becoming increasingly common due to obesity. The excess body weight particularly puts stress on joints, especially the knees, promoting inflammation and further complicating the disorder. That's where prescription pain medication comes into play, helping manage arthritis by alleviating inflammation and pain, enabling enhanced joint function, and significantly improving the overall quality of life for the patients.
