"Lars has earned a respected reputation for his ability to tackle complex challenges and deliver solutions that actually work for his clients," said John Allen, President and CEO of Product Safety Consulting Inc. "His commitment to building real relationships and his understanding of the compliance landscape align perfectly with our approach to making product safety and certification more accessible."

Throughout his career, Mellander has demonstrated a strong work ethic and an ability to thrive in competitive, fast-paced environments. His experience spans both emerging technology companies and established enterprises, giving him unique insight into the diverse challenges manufacturers face when bringing products to market.

Product Safety Consulting has helped secure more than 3,000 product safety approvals across 35 countries since its founding. The company specializes in field evaluations, NRTL certification, CE marking, and global certification services, with expertise covering everything from medical devices and AI technology to commercial cooking equipment and electric vehicles.

"What attracted me to Product Safety Consulting is their genuine commitment to customer relationships. As a company, Product Safety Consulting believes that trusted relationships with customers and always doing what is uniquely and ethically right are the foundation for success." Mellander said. "After 36 years in business, they've built the relationships and expertise that can make a real difference for companies trying to get their products to market safely and efficiently." Mellander will work directly with manufacturers to understand their specific needs and connect them with Product Safety Consulting's comprehensive testing and certification services.
