SB 553 Training & Compliance

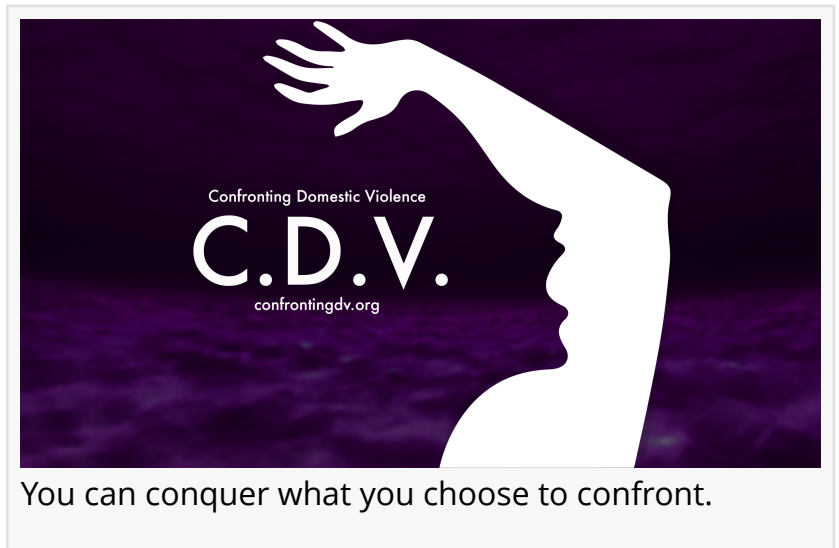

Domestic violence is not just a personal issue; it can also have a significant impact on and in the workplace. Victims and survivors of domestic violence may experience decreased productivity, “65 percent of employers don't have a plan for domestic violence.”

Society for Human Resource Management (SHRM) increased absenteeism, and even job loss. 21% of full-time employed adults said they were victims of domestic violence and 74% of that group said they were harassed at work by their abusers. Additionally, perpetrators of domestic violence may bring their abusive behavior into the workplace, creating a dangerous and hostile environment for their colleagues. By implementing a workplace violence prevention plan, companies can create a safe and supportive environment for their employees, while also contributing to the overall well-being of the community.

One of the key benefits of Confronting Domestic Violence's program is the time and cost savings it offers to corporations. By providing a one-stop solution for meeting Senate Bill 553 requirements, the program eliminates the need for companies to spend time and resources on developing their own training programs. Additionally, by addressing domestic violence in the workplace, corporations can potentially avoid costly legal battles and negative publicity that may arise from incidents of domestic violence spillover.

Confronting Domestic Violence, Inc. is committed to making a positive impact on the community by addressing the issue of domestic violence in the workplace.
