From the back cover:

Two childhood friends conspire to create a global killer through a manufactured famine, by altering the genetics of our food seeds. Their goal is to devastate America and transform the government into a dictatorship. Another goal is to use this crisis to purge America of all people except European descent. They deceive the American public, including their long-time friend, the Pope of the Catholic church. They ask the Pope to support their plans for a governmental overhaul by claiming that they can solve this crisis. Selected members of Congress who don't support this plan are identified and assassinated by the Mafia.

While this sinister plot takes shape, a former Air Force test pilot, now the leader of America's largest privately funded cybersecurity firm, joins forces with an intelligence specialist with the Russian Federal Security Service, to expose and thwart this sinister plot. Everything culminates in Washington, DC. This story is a compelling tale of good versus evil. Which will prevail?

About the author:

Theodore A. Franks has always been fascinated by global and political events. He is 64 years old, and has been in information technology for his entire career. That career has allowed him to travel to all corners of the world. His worldview has been shaped by a tremendous curiosity in how things work, and how people act. His interaction with many cultures and languages, religions, and foods, has influenced him on a very fundamental level. It's changed how he thinks. This book is the result of that worldview. It took three years to develop, and over five years to write. This is his first attempt to write and publish a novel.

But don't underestimate the power of a global and political observer who crafted a plot and a story that's realistic, powerful, intricate, compelling, and every bit could happen today.

Theodore considers himself so very blessed in life because of his "bubble," a circle of family and friends that mean so much to him. He splits his time between Tybee Island, Georgia, and Daufuskie Island, South Carolina. His hobbies include drumming, boating, gardening, traveling, and cooking. His charitable and society memberships include the American Legion, Post 154; Tybee Island, Georgia, the Savannah Georgia Chapter of the Ancient Order of Hibernians; the Knights of Columbus, Council 631; Savannah, Georgia, the Friendly Sons of St. Patrick; Savannah, Georgia, and the Savannah St. Patrick's Day Parade Committee. A key theme in his life is "Do Everything with Excellence." That's a perfect summary of who Franks is and how he tries to live.
