

Lilburn, GA Plumber Trains Army Plumbing Specialists While Serving Metro Atlanta Homes

Army Reserves Sergeant First Class Sean Nelson runs a fast-growing plumbing business while instructing military specialists at Fort Jackson

LILBURN, GA, UNITED STATES, June 26, 2025 /EINPresswire.com/ -- While most plumbers focus solely on local repairs, Sean Nelson splits his time between serving homeowners in Gwinnett, Fulton and DeKalb counties, and training the next generation of U.S. Army plumbing specialists.

Nelson, a Sergeant First Class in the Army Reserves and founder of Stars and Pipes Plumbing Atlanta, teaches the military's plumbing reclassification course at Fort Jackson in South Carolina. There, he helps active-duty soldiers develop the hands-on skills needed to succeed in the Army, and in future civilian careers.

"Teaching soldiers keeps me sharp and reminds me why doing every job with excellence matters," said Nelson. "The discipline and problem-solving skills we develop in military training directly benefit the families I serve here in metro Atlanta."

Nelson's Army students study system installation, water distribution, wastewater management, and safety standards, while learning to work with precision under pressure. These same values guide Nelson's work with his growing plumbing company back home in Lilburn.

Stars and Pipes Plumbing Atlanta has grown 150 percent since its founding, serving customers across metro Atlanta with advanced leak detection, trenchless sewer line repairs, and full water heater services. Known for its reliability, clear communication and clean work, the company prides itself on making plumbing problems less stressful for homeowners.
