

Health Product Declaration Collaborative Announces 2025 Board and Technical Committee Leadership

Leader in Material Health Refreshes Member Leadership with Industry Expertise

WAKEFIELD, MA, UNITED STATES, June 30, 2025 /EINPresswire.com/ -- The Health Product Declaration Collaborative (HPDC) today announced its 2025 Board of Directors and 2025-26 Technical Committee, continuing a tradition of the steady member leadership that has guided the evolution of materials transparency in the building industry since 2012.

The annual member leadership refresh brings together experienced professionals from across the entire building industry landscape, maintaining the continuity that has made the HPD Open Standard the industry's trusted format for material disclosure. The HPDC now represents over 300 member companies who rely on its proven framework for transparent disclosure of building product content and associated human and environmental health information.

“

The HPD Open Standard provides the reliable data needed to make informed choices that support both human and environmental health.”

Gregory Arcangeli from the City of Austin

HPDC Board Welcomes New Members HPDC’s Board of Directors works with the executive director and staff to develop the strategy for HPDC and has responsibility to ensure the oversight and governance of HPDC reflect the interests of the organization’s members. Bringing together voices from across the building industry , the 15-member Board, includes three new members for 2025:

- Gregory Arcangeli from the City of Austin
- Don Haynes of Florim USA

- Eileen Gohr from HDR Inc.

"The HPD Open Standard provides the reliable data needed to make informed choices that support both human and environmental health," said Gregory Arcangeli, the new board member from City of Austin. "I'm excited to contribute to HPDC's mission and help drive industry-wide progress toward healthier, more sustainable buildings."

"I am excited to use my extensive manufacturing experience to support the HPDC mission," said Don Haynes, the new board member from Florim USA. "By understanding the unique needs and challenges of the manufacturing sector in achieving material transparency, I look forward to being a part of transforming transparency from an obstacle into a valuable tool—empowering manufacturers to drive innovation, sustainability, and trust in their products."

Steady Progress Through Market Adoption

The HPD Open Standard has become integrated into standard practice at major architecture firms and manufacturing companies. Organizations use HPDs as part of their established processes for:

- Product selection and specification
- Quality assurance documentation
- Supply chain management
- Continuous improvement programs

Technical Committee Tackles Real-World Implementation

The 15-member Technical Committee has the responsibility to develop and maintain the HPD Open Standard as an industry-harmonized specification that provides an industry-wide foundation for material health practice. Advancements in 2025-26 will focus on practical challenges that project teams and manufacturers face in reporting and using material health information, such as:

- Simplifying reporting for small and medium manufacturers
- Addressing supply chain complexity in global markets
- Harmonizing with other transparency standards to reduce duplication
- Developing cost-effective verification pathways
- Automating material health evaluation

For the 2025-2026 term, the Technical Committee welcomes these new members, joining 13 current and returning members:

- Alivia Green, Brightworks Sustainability
- Charlotte Jolly, ZGF Architects
