Rise in government investments in sports events, surge in number of gyms and health clubs, and increase in demand for instant energy-boosting products drive the growth of the global isotonic drinks market. However, threat of counterfeit products and stringent government rules and regulations hinder the market growth. On the other hand, increase in number of athletes in developing countries and surge in awareness regarding health wellness products present new opportunities in the coming years.

Covid-19 Scenario:

Production activities of isotonic drinks halted completely or partially due to lockdown measures implemented in various countries. Moreover, disruptions in the supply chain presented challenges in production.

Owing to lockdown restrictions, there were restrictions on outdoor sports such as football, cricket, volleyball, baseball, and others. Moreover, many major sports events were either canceled or postponed. This reduced the demand for isotonic drinks. Distribution channels such as supermarkets and hypermarkets were closed during the lockdown. Consumers preferred online channels to purchase isotonic drinks as they opted for various exercises and physical activities at home.
