“Being locally owned means we’re accountable to our community, not a corporation,” said Stockwell. “We have the freedom to do what’s right for every family—offering guidance, flexibility, and truly personal care when it’s needed most.”

The funeral home also provides families with digital resources designed to extend the experience of remembrance. These include custom online memorials, tribute videos, flower ordering, and secure donation options to help with funeral expenses. Families can also share service details through email or social media, making it easier to keep loved ones informed. Additionally, the funeral home offers one year of daily grief support emails to help families through the emotional journey that continues after the service.

“Our goal is to make a difficult time just a little easier,” said Stockwell. “That means providing not only professional services but emotional support and clear communication from the very beginning.”
