According to recent studies, the rise in cardiovascular diseases and the aging population have led to an increase in the demand for angioplasty balloons. These balloons are used in the treatment of various conditions such as coronary artery disease, peripheral artery disease, and renal artery stenosis. The growing prevalence of these diseases, coupled with the need for less invasive treatment options, is expected to drive the growth of the angioplasty balloons market.

One of the key factors contributing to the growth of this market is the continuous advancements in medical technology.
