The Dolleschals grew up in modest circumstances in Austria - Andreas in a cozy village apartment and Barbara on a farm where she cultivated a deep respect for nature. Despite their different settings, both learned to overcome adversity and channel their challenges into strength. These early life lessons shaped their unique perspectives and set the foundation for future success.

In Legacy Makers TV, the Dolleschals recount pivotal moments that defined their paths, including the challenges and triumphs of their initial corporate careers. For years, they successfully ran a digital agency in Austria, serving renowned European clients. But driven by a dream to embrace new opportunities, they took the leap of faith and moved to the U.S. after winning the green card lottery - a decision that required leaving behind their well-established lives and starting from zero.

Their perseverance and entrepreneurial spirit led them to bring the popular Zotter Chocolates brand to America, a task initially met with skepticism. "People told us we were crazy—logistics would kill us," Andreas shared during the episode. Today, Zotter Chocolates US is synonymous with premium European chocolate in America, and the Dolleschals have cemented their legacy through their commitment to excellence and innovation.

In their episode, Andreas and Barbara delve into the emotional and personal sacrifices of their journey. They open up about navigating American business culture as immigrants, building credibility in new markets, and the heartbreaking loss of their beloved son, David. Despite these challenges, the couple emerged stronger, channeling their pain into creating meaningful work and forging connections within the community.

Reflecting on their journey, Andreas emphasized the importance of discipline, precision, and teamwork - lessons he carried from his early career in a professional kitchen and his time in the military. Barbara spoke passionately about finding mentors and embracing resilience through teamwork, tapping into the Austrian values instilled during her childhood on the farm.

The Dolleschals show their viewers that true success is not only about building a viable business but also about creating lasting relationships and helping others grow. Their journey exemplifies how sheer determination, adaptability, and a willingness to take risks can lead to extraordinary outcomes.

Their feature on Legacy Makers TV is now available for streaming on Apple TV, Amazon Fire Stick, Roku, and online at Inside Success TV.
