

College HUNKS Hauling Junk & Moving Welcomes New Utah Owner with Expansion Plans

He is joined by his brother-in-law and business partner, Ricardo Quiñones, who has a background in small business operations.

“As a teacher, soldier, and business advisor, I've always been passionate about helping people grow,” said Dr. Remington Curtis. “With College HUNKS, we're not just providing moving and junk removal, we're developing the next generation of professionals by teaching life skills like teamwork, accountability, and customer service.”

College HUNKS, which stands for Honest, Uniformed, Nice, Knowledgeable, Service, was founded by two college friends with a beat-up van and has since grown to over 200 locally owned franchises nationwide. The company's commitment to training leaders and giving back is a cornerstone of its business model. For every job completed, two meals are donated to U.S. Hunger, with more than 5 million meals donated to date. Additionally, up to 70% of items hauled are either recycled or donated to nonprofits such as Habitat for Humanity and Goodwill.

That commitment to service is what drew Curtis to the franchise. After earning his Ph.D. and teaching accounting at several universities, he transitioned back into industry through his role as a partner at Sunbelt Business Brokers of Utah, where he helped entrepreneurs buy and sell small businesses. When he saw the College HUNKS opportunity, he knew it was the right fit.

“This brand stood out,” he said. “It’s mission-driven, it’s proven, and it fills a real need in the community.”

Looking ahead, the new ownership team plans to expand operations along the Wasatch Front, while building a business that gives back to the communities they serve.

“Whether it’s sponsoring a Little League team or helping high schoolers prepare for their future careers, we’re committed to giving back,” Curtis said.
