What Is the Primary Driver Of The Neutralizing Antibody Market?

The increasing prevalence of infectious diseases is expected to propel the growth of the neutralizing antibody market. These diseases, caused by harmful microorganisms such as bacteria, viruses, fungi, or parasites, spread from one person to another either directly or indirectly.

The torchbearers of this surge in infectious diseases are increased global travel activities, facilitating the rapid spread of pathogens across borders. Neutralizing antibodies have come up as a potent tool in the treatment of these diseases by specifically targeting and blocking pathogens, thus preventing disease progression. Besides, they improve patient outcomes by providing precise and timely immune protection.
