Also expected to propel decongestants market growth are the increased instances of allergies, colds, and sinusitis. As immune reactions to harmless substances, allergies alongside viral infections causing respiratory symptoms colds, and sinus inflammation often caused by infection or allergies sinusitis are clearly on the rise. These escalating incidences are attributable to increased air pollution and environmental irritants. Decongestants serve to manage these conditions by relieving nasal congestion, reducing inflammation in nasal passages, increasing airflow, easing breathing difficulties, and enhancing patient comfort. An example being the 2022-2023 US flu season when 31.9 million individuals reported flu symptoms with a concentration of 85% of cases between October and January, according to a December 2023 report by USAFacts, a US-based nonprofit.
