

Ford Recalls Nearly 200,000 Mustang Mach-e Cars With Door Latch Malfunction

RENO, NV, UNITED STATES, July 1, 2025 /EINPresswire.com/ -- Earlier last week, Ford Motors was forced to recall 197,342 of its 2021-2025 (Electric) Mustang Mach-e vehicles due to a significant safety hazard. According to

The Epoch Times, if the battery drops below an 8.4-volt charge level, the electric latches on the vehicle's doors may not have sufficient power to operate and open the door.

This doesn't just pose a risk for day-to-day tasks with the car; it also highlights new safety complexities in the event of an emergency or accident. Ford is known for its dependability and innovation, but this could be very damaging to the company's reputation, apart from the obvious new fear that many Ford drivers may now have with their vehicles, whether they are electric, hybrid, or gas.

Vehicle recalls should not be overlooked; and individuals are wise to seek legal counsel if they've been injured in an electric vehicle through no fault of their own.
